General Reimbursement

• Employees may claim reimbursement for eligible business expenses incurred while performing authorized company work.

• Expenses must be supported by valid bills, receipts, or other required documents.

• Employees should submit reimbursement claims through the company's expense management system.

• Personal expenses that are not related to company business are not eligible for reimbursement.

Travel Reimbursement

• Employees travelling for authorized business purposes may claim eligible travel expenses according to company travel rules.

• Eligible expenses may include approved transportation, accommodation, and other authorized business travel expenses.

• Employees should obtain the required travel approval before making business travel arrangements.

• Travel reimbursement claims should include relevant tickets, invoices, receipts, and approval information.

Accommodation

• Employees travelling for official business may claim accommodation expenses within the limits defined by the company's travel policy.

• The employee should submit the hotel invoice or other valid proof of payment with the reimbursement claim.

• Luxury or personal accommodation expenses that exceed approved limits may not be reimbursed unless specifically authorized.

Food and Meal Expenses

• Employees may claim eligible meal expenses incurred during approved business travel when permitted under the company's travel policy.

• Meal claims should include valid receipts when required.

• Personal entertainment expenses are not considered eligible meal expenses.

Reimbursement Submission

• Employees should submit reimbursement claims within 30 days from the date of the expense.

• Claims submitted without required supporting documents may be returned for correction.

• The finance department reviews eligible reimbursement claims after submission.

• If a reimbursement claim is rejected, the employee may contact the Finance or HR department for clarification depending on the nature of the issue.
